THE REALM OF IMAGINATION

The surprising deductions of Sherlock Holmes—who is still living, if Conan Doyle has not left him out in an abysmal canon, are commonplace in comparison with the day-dream rambles of serious-minded scientists. A small and strange fact is a stimulant which sends scientific ideas on long and wonderful flights in the spacious realm of the flexible and scintillating imagination.

A scientific report has just been published on the "American marsupial caenolestes." The animal, which is six inches long, and resembles a sharp-toothed rat, was caught in Venezuela nine years ago, and it is described as a "mirror of the past." It is said to be unlike any now living in the world, and that its extinct relatives lived in the miocene period, three million years ago.

This family survived, according to the deductions, because its members were small and led simple lives. Caenolestes, it is deduced, belongs to one of the groups which perished ages ago, because its bones and teeth are the same as those of the extinct animals. It is deduced that the tastes of the caenolestes were the same three million years ago as now.

As the nearest living relatives are the Australian bandicoots, the deductive process follows on to the theory as to whether a land-bridge connected South America and Australia, and further questionable deduction is whether the animal migrated from Australia to South America on the land-bridge, or vice versa, or whether, perhaps, it originated in a southern continent, which vanished long ago, and from there traveled to South America and Australia.

May be all of these deductions rest on scientific terra firma. May be all the conjectures are more logical than fanciful. Yet there are many well-established truths which scientists will not accept, which they even ridicule. The unscientific mind finds it difficult to trail caenolestes back three million years, and over the great land-bridge, or down the vanished southern continent of antarctic cold.

BERATING DISTINGUISHED MEN

Chairman Fordney of the House Ways and Means Committee made a vicious attack on former President Wilson in the debate on the new revenue bill. The speech was political and vituperative. He declared that he had voted for government control of the railroads in order "to put Wilson in a hole, and we did," but he subsequently said, under cross-fire, that this assertion was intended as a joke.

The friction and jealousies, as well as the failures and the rancor, of the war-time and the period after the war, when everything was abnormal and unsettled and many persons were irritated, reckless and vindictive, made a habit of denunciation. And of late a few most scathing articles concerning prominent public officials, including President Harding, have been published and acclaimed.

Men in public life are amenable to fair criticism. They are public servants. Yet their prominence or their offices should not subject them to mean, contemptible, personal assaults; to calumny, slander, insult, hate and philippics, making them the objects of national opprobrium. They are entitled to justice and considerations in criticism.

When Mr. Fordney explained that he had meant a statement which sounded like a confession of disloyalty as a joke, he must have realized that he had made a grave mistake. His exhortation of Mr. Wilson was so brutal that it emphasized by sharp, glaring contrast the serious fault of malicious iconoclasm to the people, and for this reason it may act as a restraint on maledictory speaking and writing.

Ordinary fairness, if not a certain respect, is due to men in public office, and especially to former occupants of the White House and most particularly to the President. Government itself exists on trust and dignity. If there must be criticism, let it be reasonable and patriotic, and not deliberately spiteful and defamatory. Let us return to normalcy in our treatment of prominent men.

RUNNYMEDE AT AUCTION AS LOT

The modern idea of popular liberty is presumed to have had its origin with the compulsory signing of Magna Charta by King John, and Runnymede has been a magic name ever since the English barons secured there the guaranty of constitutional government. Runnymede! It is a soft and soothing word, sweet and rolling, like a velvety prairie, scented of fresh, green grass. One thinks of a breezy purring meadow, and a high, blue sky. It is a romantic, hallowed place. How appropriate that the great grant of freedom should have been sealed and delivered at Runnymede!

Famous Runnymede, the cradle of English republicanism, is advertised to be sold at auction as a lot. Runnymede is to be put on the block. This is the shocking news from London. An English lord, a member of one of the oldest families of England, with deep emotion called attention to the irony of listing Runnymede as a vacant lot and offering it to bidders under the red flag. Runnymede might be purchased, he sarcastically remarked, by one of the moneyed knights of the social-climbers.

Runnymede should be a national park. England must not allow it to be a neglected, weedy lot, under penalty of depreciating the cherished ideals of government of, for and by the people. Sentiment is a living force. Runnymede end is the foundation of the Parliament buildings.

MUST WE HEAR ABOUT WILHELM?

Horation Bottomly told the English House of Commons, the other day, that Holland should be called on to surrender the former contendor for the world's championship, Kaiser Wilhelm—pardon us, William Hohenzollern. If the present government Bottomly declared, could not handle the subject, "it should make way for men of sterner stuff."

What should be done with Wilhelm is a bothersome question; bothersome chiefly because the world is reminded of his existence too often. So far he has been about as much of a disturbance as any simple person of the cap and bells. He is scarcely important enough to be exiled on a guarded island, like Napoleon. He does not appear dangerous enough to lock up. The German Republic seems to like him better in Holland than in the Fatherland. And any nation which would acquire him would have to pay his board and give him spending money. However, come to think of it, Bottomly has not been in the limelight for some time.

Fossils have been unearthed in several places in North and South America of late. But we are not bothering so much about them as we are about the live ones of this town which obstruct every movement for the common weal.

Arm Badly Crushed

When his arm was caught in the rolls of an electric wringer, Harry Halseizer, 8, son of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Halseizer, Northumberland, suffered a badly crushed right arm.

Years afterward Allx remembered her so, as Martin Lloyd helped her to spring free of the branches, and she stood laughing at their surprise and still clinging to his hand. "The day we raised the rose tree" had a place of its own in Allx's memory, as a time of carefree fun and content, a time of perfume and sunshine—perhaps the last time of its kind that any one of them was to know.

Cherry looked at Martin daintily as she joined the laborers; her whole being was thrilling to the excitement of his glance; she was hardly conscious of what she was doing or saying. Martin came close to her, in the general confusion.

"How's my little sweetheart this morning?"

Cherry looked up, her throat contracted, she looked down again, unable to speak. She had been waiting for his first word; now that it had come it seemed so far richer and sweeter than her wildest dream.

"How can I see you a minute?" Martin murmured, snapping his big knife shut.

"I have to walk down for the mail," stammered Cherry, conscious only of Martin and herself.

Both Peter and her father were watching her with an uneasiness and suspicion that had sprung into being full-blown. Both men were asking themselves what they knew of this strange young man who was suddenly a part of their intimate little world.

Peter, in his secret heart, had a vague, dissatisfied feeling that Lloyd was a man who held women, as a class, rather in disrespect, and had probably had his experiences with them, but there was no way of expressing, much less governing his conduct toward Martin by so purely speculative a prejudice. Somewhat appalled, in the sunny garden, struggling with the banksia, Peter decided that this was not much to know of a person who might have the audacity to fall in love with an exquisite and innocent Cherry. After all, she would not be a little girl forever; some man would want to take that little corn-colored head and that delicious little pink-clad person away with him some day, to be his wife.

And suddenly Peter was torn by a stab of pure pain, and he stood puzzled and sick, in the garden bed, wondering what was happening to him. "Listen—want a drink?" Allx asked, coming out with a tin dipper that spilled a glittering sheet of water down the thirsty nasturtiums. "Rest a few minutes, Peter. Dad wanted a pole, and Mr. Lloyd has gone up into the woods to cut one."

"And where's Cherry?" Peter asked, drinking deep.

"She went along—just up in the woods here," Allx answered. "They'll be back before you could get there. They've been gone five minutes!"

Five minutes were enough to take Cherry and her lover out of sight of the house, enough to have him put his arm about her, and to have her raise her lips confidently, and yet shyly, again to his. They kissed each other deeply, again and again.

Their talk was incoherent. Cherry was still playing, coquetting and smiling, her words few, and Martin, having her so near, could only repeat the endearing phrases that attempted to express to her his love and fervor.

"You darling! Do you know how I love you? You darling—you little exquisite beauty! Do you love me—do you love me?" Martin murmured, and Cherry answered breathlessly:

"You know I do—but you know I do!"

Presently he selected the sapling redwood, and brought it down with two blows of his ax. The girl seated herself beside him, helped him strip the trunk, their hands constantly touching, the man once or twice delaying her for one more snatched and laughing kiss. And Martin said that he was going to make her the happiest wife a man ever had.

Dragging the stripped tree, they ran down the sharp hill to the house just as Anne came out to announce luncheon. Peter was wandering off in the woods nearby, but came at Allx's shrill yell of summons, and looked relieved when he saw Cherry and Martin not even talking to each other. They had been gone only ten minutes.

It was a happy meal for everyone, and after it they had attacked the rose bush again, with aching muscles now, and in the first real summer heat, it was three o'clock before, with a great crackling, and the scream of a twisted branch, and a general panting and heaving on the part of the workers, at last the feathery mass had risen a foot—two feet—into the air, had stood tottering like a wall of bloom and finally, with a downward rush, had settled to its old place on the roof. Hong was pressed into service now, and with Martin, was on the roof, grappling with a rope, shouting directions.

There was a rending, slipping noise on the roof, a scream from Martin, and shouts from the doctor and Peter.

With a great sliding and rushing of the refractory sprays, and with a horrifying stumbling and falling, down came Martin, caught in a great rope of the creeper, almost at Cherry's feet.

A time of great running and calling ensued. Cherry dropped on her knees beside him, and had his head on her arm for a moment; then her father took her place, and Allx, with an astonished look at the younger girl's wet eyes, drew her sister away. Immediately afterward Martin set up, looked bewilderedly about from one face to another, looked at his scratched wrist and said "Gee!" in a thoughtful tone.

"You scared Cherry out of ten years' growth!" Allx reproached Martin.

"I—I thought he might have hurt himself!" Cherry said, in the softest of little-girl voices, and with her shy little head hanging. Anne decided that it was becoming her clear duty to talk to Cherry.

A few minutes later Allx, Peter and Martin left for the daily ceremony of walking into the village for the mail.

The house was very still, early summer sweetness was drifting through wide-opened windows and doors; the long day was slowly declining. Anne peeped into the deserted living room, softened through all its pleasant shabbiness into real beauty by the shafts of sunset red that came in through the casement windows; and was deliberating between various becoming occupations—for Martin might walk back with the girls—when her uncle called her.

"Anne—you weren't there when that young chap tumbled. But I've been worrying about it a little. There's no question—there's no question that she—that Cherry—called him by his name, 'Martin,' she called him."

Anne had crossed to the shadowy doorway; she stood still. "You've not noticed anything between him and Cherry?" pursued the doctor. "A girl might call a man by his name, I suppose."

"I don't think there has been anything to notice," Anne stated, in a level tone.

"Well, it must be stopped, if it has begun," decided her uncle. "I can't permit it—I'd forgotten how the little witch grows!"

Again Anne was silent. She was not in love with Martin Lloyd; she was not as susceptible as the much younger Cherry, and she had not had his urging to help her to a quick surrender. But for the first time in her life she had seen an absolutely suitable man, a man whose work, position, looks, name and character fitted her rather exacting standard, and for the first time she had let herself think confidently of being wooed and won.

And, standing in the doorway, she tasted the last bitter dregs of the dream. It was all over. Anne was at the age that sets twenty-five years as the definite boundary of spinsterhood. She would be twenty-five in August.

Allx came in from her walk glowing, and full of a great discovery.

"Dad," she said eagerly, taking her place at the supper table, "what do you think! I'll bet you a year that man is falling in love with our Cherry!"

Anne, at the head of the table, looked pained, but there was genuine apprehension in the lines of her face.

OBSERVATIONS

Equal pay is demanded for women teachers, in spite of the fact that they can't coach the ball team.

The people who spit on the side-walks are probably merely obeying the injunction to treat the streets just as they do their own homes.

Having studied dressmaking some girls have now reached the point where they can tell their mothers how to make their clothes.

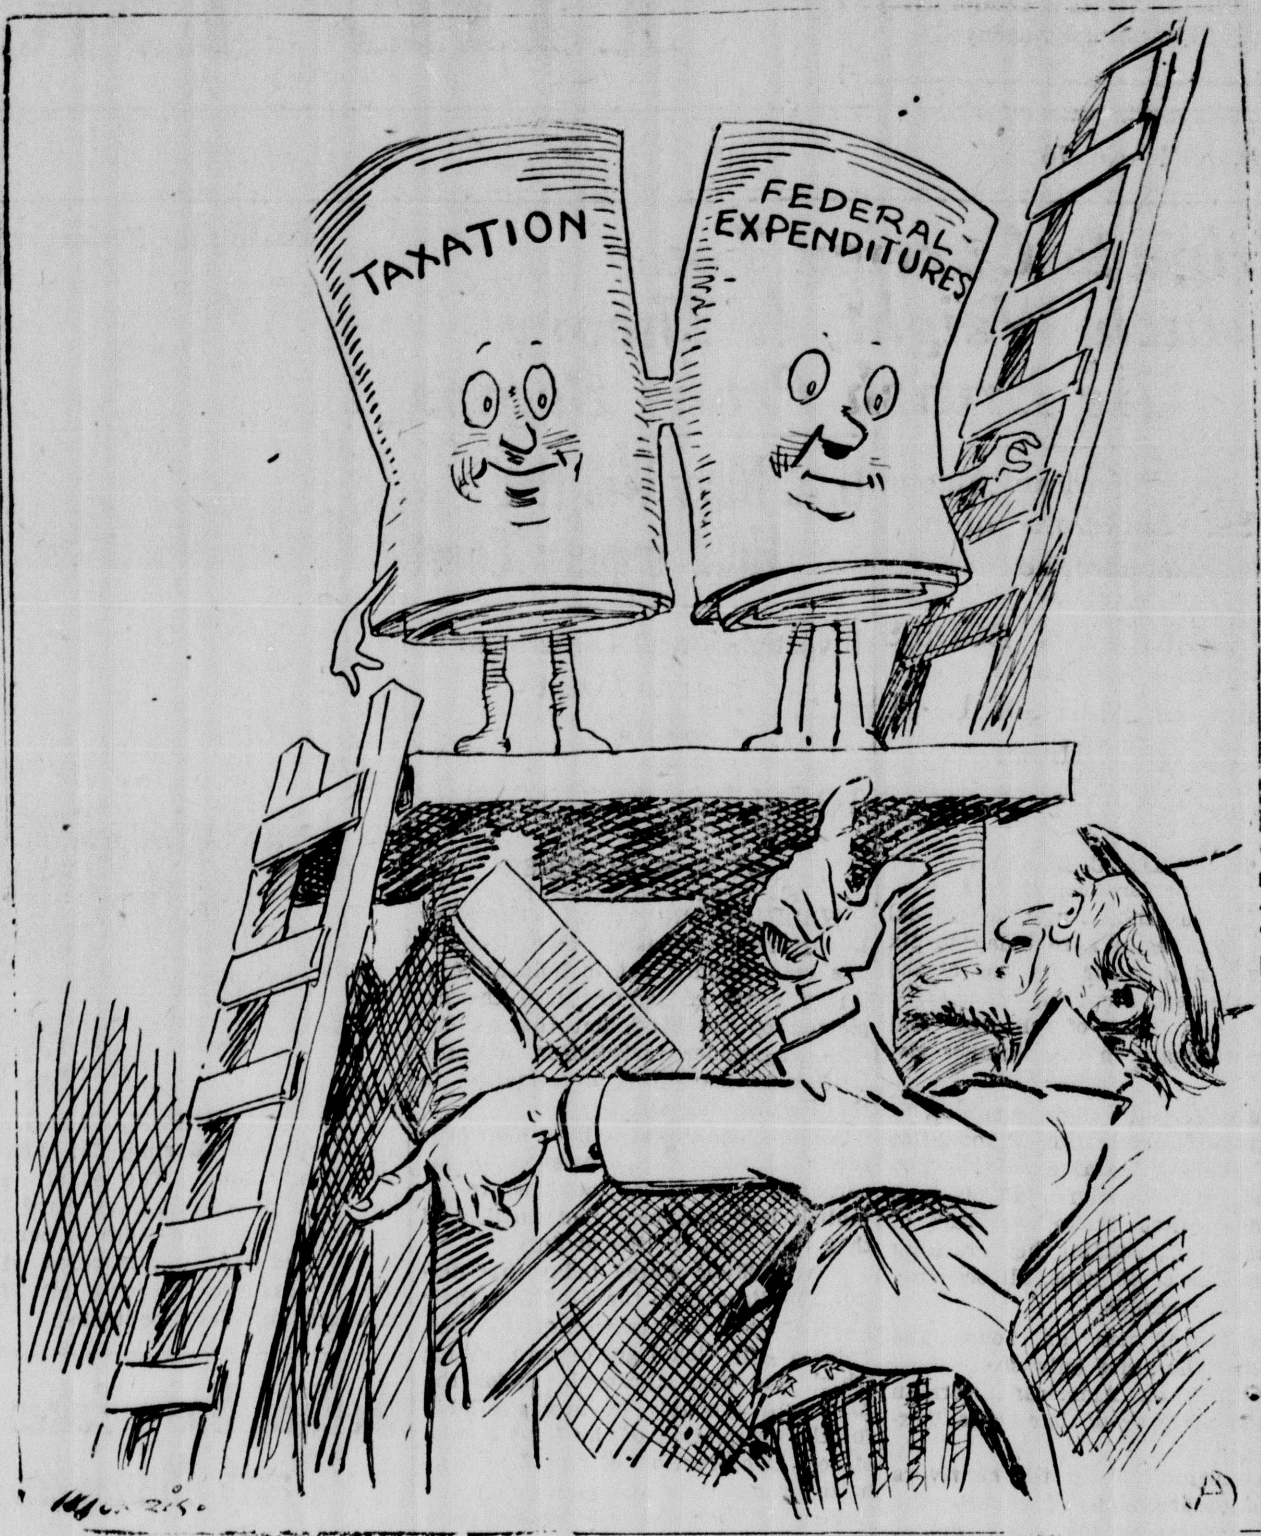

Some women who are limping along with sprained ankles are now enjoying one of the advantages of wearing high heels.

The worthless stock promoters should be able to sell their stuff to these people that think a socialistic government could make good.

THE WORLD IN ARMS

Violent and widespread rioting is reported from India and reports from Bombay and Calcutta indicate that a revolutionary movement against British rule in southern India may be attempted.

The threatened war between Panama and Costa Rica over disputed territory has been averted by the United States.

A state of war has been declared in part of Nicaragua because of revolutionary activities.

Severe fighting between the Spaniards and rebellious Moorish tribesmen continues in Morocco.

The Greeks, who are at war against the Turks, continue their advance against Angora, the Turkish National capital.

A tense and warlike situation prevails in Upper Silesia with frequent clashes between the Poles and Germans. It is believed that only the presence of allied troops prevents civil war.

HOW TO BE A SUCCESS "Character in Business"

The second of a series of Editorials showing how to be successful in business.

If a man is going to form successful business relations, he must achieve a reputation for reliability. The business world is full of people who will stretch the truth in order to make a sale of goods. Such fellows often do quite well for a time. But gradually the people to whom they have given false impressions, will find out that they have not been squarely dealt with.

The man who is going to climb high has a certain open minded sincerity, and he tells you all the ins and outs of any proposition in which he tries to interest you. You feel when you take his advice that you understand the whole situation. A fellow of that kind may sometimes lose a sale of goods by his frankness. But people like to deal with him, because they feel they know just what they are doing.

On of the reasons why people prefer to buy at advertised stores, is that they feel those concerns must be reliable. People would never spend all that money in publicity, they argue, unless they were going to back up all their statements. The world's workers can be divided into two classes in the degree to which they give their minds to their task in life. The majority of people do not put their whole minds on their job. They spend a good deal of their working hours, just barely going through the motions of their position. A great many business girls spend a large part of their thought in working hours on the dance they are going to, or planning their clothes, or thinking about their relations with the men. Young men spend a large part of their working time thinking about their sports and pastimes, the baseball games and a hundred other things.

The man or woman who is bound along the path of success, gets so interested in the job that the mind naturally dwells upon it, and is constantly planning and contriving how to do it better. It is pleasing to note that the business houses of Bristol contain many young people of that type and they are a great asset for the community.

Some Wise Burglars
WE WERE TALKING a few days ago with a merchant who has been reading these little stories about the value of good bank service. He told us of an experience he had that shows the value of the checking system.
Burglars entered his store one night and blew open the safe. It contained about $150, but most of this was in checks—less than $50 in cash. The burglars took every cent of the money but they left all the checks exactly as they found them.
They knew those checks would be worthless to them for if they tried to cash them they would be caught and easily proven guilty of the theft. This merchant said he received $9 in checks for each dollar in cash and that he always worried when he had much cash on hand.

WHY OLD BACKS ACHE

Many Bristol Old People Have Found Backache to be a Sign of Kidney Weakness

What a pity that so many people past middle age are worried with lame backs, aching kidneys, poor eyesight, sick headaches, dizziness, gravel, dropsy or distressing urinary ills. Kidney weakness brings these discomforts in age or youth, and is a dangerous thing to neglect for it leads to Bright's disease and uric acid poisoning. Doan's Kidney Pills have brought new strength to many Bristol old people. You will make no mistake by following the example of Patrick Kervick, 603 Cedar street, Bristol. He says: "My back ached so badly and there was such a soreness across my kidneys, I couldn't get up from the chair. When I stooped, I could hardly straighten and I walked around all bent over. My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly, too. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, which I got at Douglass' Drug Store, and they strengthened my back and regulated my kidneys. By using Doan's occasionally, I keep my back free from pain and my kidneys in good condition."

Says Famine Relief Has Come Too Late

English Observer Thinks Winter Will See World's Greatest Tragedy

FALL OF BOLSHIEVISM

By International News Service.
LONDON Aug. 25.—Famine relief is beginning so late in the season that Russia is doomed during the coming winter to pass through one of the worst tragedies in the history of the world, according to an interview with a prominent Englishman, printed in the Pall Mall Gazette today. This Englishman has just returned from Astrakhan which is the heart of the famine and cholera districts. The situation there is so acute and sanitary conditions are so bad that the local soviet has recommended that the population move and that the city be burned.

"Before I left Russian I talked with a leader whose name is known throughout Russia. In our conversation he said: 'Our control of is lost the end will come.'"

"The Red guards are distributors of the food. They are hated throughout the entire country."

"The time for helping real suffering in Russia, and I do not mean Petrograd and Moscow alone, is almost if not entirely past. This coming winter will see one of the greatest world tragedies of all time."

"Lenine knows that he has failed. The task he undertook was beyond human power. When he decides to go, he will go quickly and silently. With him will go Bolshevism."

Colonel William N. Haskell to Direct Russian Relief

Col. William N. Haskell, who directed the relief in Armenia, has been appointed to supervise the famine relief work of the American Relief Administration in Russia. He will leave the United States for Russia immediately. Colonel Haskell, whose home is in Albany, New York, was appointed High Commissioner of England, France, Italy and the United States to Armenia by the Peace Conference in July, 1919.

Morrisville Will Erect Temporary School Building

A number of bids have been received for the construction of a three-room temporary school building in the rear of the Morrisville school. The contract was not awarded because the specifications were not uniform. The board held a meeting to receive the bids and consider other important questions related to the opening of the schools.

The Morrisville schools are much congested and five rooms at the close of the last term were on half-time. With the anticipated increased enrollment, additional room will be necessary and it is proposed to build the three-room building on a plot of ground in the rear of the present school building, which was bought with the idea of sometime in the future erecting a high school.

Inspect Immigrants Before They Cross

Proposed Law Would Prevent Many Rejections on This Side

TO EMPOWER CONSULS

BY HARRY WARD

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The necessity for turning back hundreds of immigrants arriving at American ports who have sold their homes in the lands of their birth and spent their last pennies for passage to the "land of opportunity" will be obviated by the passage of Representative Albert Johnson's bill now before Congress, Secretary of Labor Davis pointed out today. Many of the immigrants now arriving in the United States are afflicted with dangerous and loathsome contagious diseases, are feeble minded, mentally or physically defective, or are in such circumstances that to admit them would be to fill our institutions with public charges.

The new measure provides for the weeding out of these inadmissible aliens before they leave their home countries through selection by representatives of the United States Government residing at the ports of embarkation. Two special agents will be stationed at each of the principal ports—one a member of the Public Health Service and the other an experienced immigrant inspector.

The selection of immigrants will operate through the use of the visa system, which requires the immigrant to procure from his Government a passport which must be presented to an American consular officer for visa before he can embark for the United States. This visa will be granted only after inspection by the immigrant and public health inspectors as contemplated by the Johnson measure.

"Perhaps it will cost a little more than the present hit-or-miss method of issuing passports by American consular officers," said Secretary Davis. "The present passport vise of $10, however, ought to cover the cost of this service, and, much as the revenue is needed by the Government, it is hardly fair that this tax of $10 be imposed upon aliens in their own country in addition to the head tax which they must pay upon admission to the country, without giving something in return. In the interest of humanity Congress ought not to quibble at the slightly larger appropriation necessary, if it is necessary, for a selected immigration will not require the same attention at the port of embarkation as the motley crowds now handled for knowing the heartaches now occasioned at our ports, the consciences of the American public would be easier."

It is the duty of immigration authorities to prevent the entry into this country, for the purpose of protecting American citizens and residents of the following classes of persons, when certified as such by officers of the Public Health Service: Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority, persons mentally defective, persons afflicted with tuberculosis, chronic alcoholism, contagious diseases, either loathsome or contagious.

Young Muffo Will Box Pete Hartley

Bristol Fighter to Appear in Trenton Arena Monday Night

HAS STIFF OPPONENT

Young Muffo, Bristol's celebrated boxer is going to battle next Monday night with Pete Hartley, the Durable Dane, in the Trenton Arena.

It may appear to some fans that Muffo is being asked to fight too good of a boy in taking on Hartley, but when it is considered that Jimmie Brown twice faced the Dane, once over the eight round route in Trenton and again over the 12-round distance in Hartford, Conn., and each time put up a rattling good scrap, there is every reason to believe that Muffo will prove more than trouble-some to Peter.

It must be remembered that Muffo twice whipped the daylight out of Brown, doing everything but knock him out in both engagements. If he repeats these latter performances against Hartley, the fans fortunate enough to be at the ringside are certain of witnessing a contest that will live long in their memories. George Erne also fought Hartley and Young Reno knocked Erne kicking.

There is a question being asked here as to whether or not Pete Hartley is not just a little bit anxious over his match with the Bucks county kid. Heretofore, Hartley has been willing to take on boys who held a big pull in the weights, but when he was asked to meet Muffo he insisted that the latter would have to scale 135 pounds at 3 o'clock.

What the Bristol fans base their argument on is that Hartley let Jimmie Brown enter the ring weighing well over 140 pounds and also boxed

George Erne once in Trenton and again over the 15-round route in Baltimore and never let out a squawk when he tipped the beam at 142 pounds.

The Bristolites say the answer to Hartley's demands is Muffo's punching powers. Hartley's manager, Leo P. Flynn, has seen Muffo in action. He saw him drop Brown like a log and evidently he knows that no man can take Muffo's clout on the chin and stand up under them. Therefore, he is trying to get Muffo in the ring at a poundage that may deprive him of some of his strength.

However, in both Muffo's fights with Young Reno he never moved the beam at 137 1/2 pounds, so he could not have been far over 135. And it is history that he did not show any signs of weakness.

The management of the Arena will put a new price scale in vogue beginning next Monday. There will hereafter be only two prices, namely $1 and $2. This is made necessary by the unsatisfactory arrangement of the past, when holders of 75 cent tickets have crowded into ringside chairs. Under the new arrangement the club is dividing the house, there being a like number of $1 and $2 chairs.

The reservation list will be made up as usual. Those who have always purchased $1.55 seats will have their same tickets put away and those who heretofore held $1.10 seats will also be taken care of as in the past. All seats will be reserved.

THEATRES

Forrest Theatre

In the latest Eminent Authors production, which is the first original screen story written by Gertrude Atherton, patrons of the Forrest Theatre where "Don't Neglect Your Wife!" will be shown tonight and tomorrow night, will find the true story of an unusual situation that occurred in the social circles of San Francisco which concerned the love of a successful writer and editor, Langdon Masters, for the neglected wife of Dr. Howard Talbot, an aristocrat from the south. The pair renounced ever seeing each other again when they discovered they were in love, but the neglectful husband, aroused at last, demands that Masters abandon his promising newspaper career and leave San Francisco. He accepts the sentence and drifts to New York's notorious "Five Points," where he is saved from utter degradation to a life of usefulness by Mrs. Talbot, after her husband had divorced her for running away from him.

An all-star cast including Mabel Julienne Scott, Lewis S. Stone, Chas. Clary, Kate Lester, Darrel Foss, Richard Tucker, R. D. MacLean, Arthur Hoyt and Josephine Crowell, gives an excellent interpretation of this remarkable story by Mrs. Atherton. Wallace Worsley directed it.

New Colonial Theatre

The New Colonial Theatre presents today the long anticipated Edgar Lewis-Pathe feature, "Lahoma." Mr. Lewis's specialty is the outdoor picture, because he is a lover of Nature and believes that the greatest romances, are those enacted in the vast open spaces where God's work is most magnificent.

"Lahoma" is a story of the West—of those early days when men left their comfortable homes in the East and took their wives and their children across thousand of miles of rough, hard roads to a young and new land filled with dangers and hardships—adventure and romance.

The action of the story revolves around Lahoma and a tender-hearted outlaw who adopts her after rescuing her from death by the outlaws, of whose band he was a member.

The cast, a large one, was picked with the care that characterizes all Edgar Lewis casts. Peaches Jackson plays the baby Lahoma and Louise Burnham is Lahoma, the young woman. Jack Perrin, Russel Simpson, Wade Bateler Will Jefferis, Yvette Mitchell, H. M. Lindley are among those playing important roles.

A Bitter-Sweet Story of Life

From the novel by Olive Wadsley Fate placed little Toni deep down in the London slums. As she blossomed like a lily in the mire into rare and beautiful young womanhood, the same prankish Fate plucked her from her squalid surroundings and offered her riches, culture, position and LOVE. But the last was bitter—the sweet was tinged with gall.
